The process of adoption is multi-stage procedure which is governed by law. This allows the adoption to go through private agencies, a children's aid society, or the court.

Private Adoption

A private adoption can be handled by whatever agency which is licensed to provide private adoption services. The birth parents are able to pick the adoptive parents in private adoptions. If you know of a child available for adoption, you can contact a private adoption licensee. Private adoptions can be stressful emotionally and due to the paperwork requirements involved. It is suggested that you acquire legal counsel for help.

Public Adoption

In instances where the birth parents wish for a different family to adopt their child, a public adoption through a children's aid society may be performed. In addition, a public adoption may be done by the courts if it is determined that the original parents cannot deal with the responsibility of taking care of a child. Public adoptions are difficult and need the assistance of an experienced lawyer. We know the nuances of the public adoption system. Our company will provide you with expert representation.

International Adoption

has final authority over the adoption. International adoption agencies are approved to handle such cases. The process would involve a home study and letter of approval from Children and Youth Services.
